Learn more The Pennsylvania Department of State announced the recount Wednesday because the results are within a half percent margin, with McCormick ahead by 27,000 votes.

A new timeline now takes over before the results can be certified.

"Once counties finish counting their ballots, they must begin the recount

The 80,000 remaining votes mentioned by the Department of State in its statement include the 10,000 that were added to the totals Wednesday, Harris said, and tens of thousands of ballots have been adjudicated as invalid by the counties. Mark Harris, lead strategist for the McCormick campaign, said in a Thursday media call that Casey's campaign has sent letters to some counties challenging their rejection of provisional ballots because the

"There is zero legal precedent to count the votes of unregistered voters in Pennsylvania," Fitzpatrick said. Pennsylvania law requires that in order to cast a ballot, you must be registered.
